'Support For Servicemen':
Red-White-Blue Armbands
Worn By Group At NMU

A group of Northern Michigan University students, concerned about the anti-war protests and the number of black armbands being worn by those involved in moratoriums, decided to show their concern for the armed forces by wearing red, white and blue armbands.

The students decided to buy some red, white and blue cloth, and sewed the armbands by hand. The number of "patriotic" armbands they fashioned quickly were picked up, and the group enlisted the support of some business firms and individuals to help them in the project.

Involved in the student project are Wayne Martin, Karl Measel, Frank Wilgen, AK Bernard, Mark Nordrum, Jon Thurston and Doty Dancer.

Surprised At Reception

When Thomas Llelylyn, chairman of the Young Americans for Freedom at NMU, heard about the idea, he quickly contacted Wilgen, and threw the support of his group behind the idea.

"We were surprised at how so many students were interested in the red-white-blue armbands," said Wilgen, who is from Fowler. "We didn't have nearly enough to go around, despite getting a batch of 50 from one Marquette woman alone. The idea's really taken hold."

City Woman Helps
Mrs. Leo Grieninger, 209 N. Fourth St., who was in a store and overheard a conversation concerning the armbands, volunteered her help in making them.

"We're not extremists," Wilgen said. "We just want to show our support for the men in the armed forces and our government at this time."
