

Three Programs Set:Oakland University Collegium Musicum In Area Next Week

Appearing in concert in the Marquette area Monday and Tuesday of next week will be the Collegium Musicum of Oakland University in downstate Rochester.

A touring group of five instrumentalists and one singer, the Collegium Musicum will present programs at the Northwoods Supper Club, St. Paul's Episcopal Church and Northern Michigan University.

The ensemble is devoted to the performance of Renaissance and baroque music. Very little of this repertoire is heard today, but the rhythms and tones of the music reportedly make it appealing to 20th Century audiences.

Ancient Instruments

The musicians from Oakland — which is affiliated with Michigan State University in East Lansing — use authentic reproductions of ancient instruments when playing Renaissance music.

Among them are the recorder, crumhorn, zink, rackett and rauschpfeife. The harpsichord also is incorporated.

Short explanations of the music and the instruments are given in the course of each performance by the ensemble, which has appeared recently in many programs throughout the Detroit area, including the Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, Cathedral of St. Paul in Detroit, and in high schools and before service clubs.

Schedule Noted

The schedule for the Marquette concerts is as follows: NMU Fine Arts lounge, performance for music department staff and students, 3 p.m. Monday; Northwoods, concert following dinner at 6:30 p.m. Monday, St. Paul's Episcopal Church concert at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

The concert at St. Paul's is part of the Alex P. Hamby memorial recital series.

Students Issue Demands

(Continued from Page One)

such call," this one from an anonymous supporter of retaining the Job Corps center.

(Jones commented that he has received an average of one or two threatening phone calls each month since he has been in Marquette "because I am in Job Corps.")

Other Fund Cuts

Jamrich said: "Let me make it clear and explicit: I will not be intimidated, threatened or forced into a decision or the making of a decision, especially in this particular case at this point in time in view of several compelling facts:

"1. This university and I as president have by word and action given evidence of a continuing commitment to programs designed to provide education and training for youth and adults who seek such training for a productive role in the world of work

"2. The decision, at the federal level, to terminate the Job Corps at Northern is not the only cut in federal funds for this university. Federal cuts in support of loans, work study, and the like for next year total almost $300,000, which means that several hundred students and prospective students of Northern will be deprived of the opportunity to attend this institution

"3. The decision, having been made at the federal level, precludes the necessity of having the university make a formal decision.

"4. As of this date, the university (which is the contractor for the program) has not received any information regarding the basis and rationale for the decision to discontinue this center. And, until we have that rationale, as well as some indication that there is a possibility for changing the decision, the board and I do not have a decision to make except the phasing-out of the program as of June 30, 1969 and the urging of Washington agencies that the program not be curtailed prior to that date as has evidently been suggested by some OEO (Office of Economic Opportunity) and Washington Job Corps staff.

"5. . . . during the past several months it has been evident that certain members of the Washington office of Job Corps have been less than enthusiastic about the Marquette center.

"6. It appeared obvious to me that the Washington Job Corp office had made up its mind to close this center at least two months ago."

Jamrich said the Washington office has failed to exercise its option to renew its contract with NMU, even though the deadline for renewal fell three weeks ago. Washington also has refused to honor purchase orders for new equipment for the center, he said, indicating further that officials there already had decided to close the center.

Letters Unanswered

Finally, he said, "two very important letters" he sent to William P. Kelly, national director of the Job Corps, have gone unanswered while Kelly has ordered a halt to sending new enrollees to the NMU center, as of Feb. 1.

"I and the administration of this university are being made the goat while the actual decision was made in Washington," Jamrich said.

"At the point that this board and I as president of Northern have to make a decision," we shall be ready to make it and we will announce it."

'Darling Of The Program'

Following Jamrich's statement, Jones took exception to any indication that the Marquette Job Corps center was below average in performance.

"I challenge anyone in Washington to prove that we do not have a quality program here comparable to any in this country. Until a change in personnel was made (in Washington), we were talked of as the 'darling of the Job Corps program.'"

He suggested that a committee be formed to study the Job Corps program here and evaluate it.

Placement Problem

Jones said Marquette is isolated from urban areas and this makes direct placement of Job Corps graduates difficult. Instead, many of the graduates are transferred to YWCA centers for further training and eventual placement. The center here does not receive credit for those placements, Jones said.

Following Jamrich's statement, the meeting with Job Corps representatives was open to discussion, and the president was asked repeatedly for an expression of support for continuation of the Job Corps on the campus.

Rosalyn Staffney, a Job Corps woman from Dayton, Ohio, said, "We have the feeling that you did take a stand on the underground newspaper (a mimeographed publication that Jamrich last month condemned for printing "irrelevant obscenities" and material involving "character impugment"). You stated your opinion on that, and really all we're asking for is some sort of statement from you to the people in Washington."

In Arrears In Payments

Jamrich replied that this was a matter for the board to act upon. He said he would bring it up at the April 24 board meeting, and "I think the board will have a point of view regarding this."

During the discussion, it was disclosed by Jamrich that the Job Corps Center had been established on the campus without the official approval of the NMU board.

He also said the OEO was $60,000 in arrears in payments to NMU for the Job Corps operation during the first five months last year. Jones said the suspension of payments grew out of audit problems. "OEO had to solve those audit problems before making the payments," Jones said. Jamrich maintained the payments should not have been held up in the interim.

Upshot Of Meetings

During the course of Jamrich's meetings with the Job Corps representatives and the NMU students, the president said:

- He would appear before the student gathering at noon today and make a statement.

- He will continue to try to find out from Washington officials what rationale lies behind the decision to close the center here.

- Efforts will be made to prevent the closing of the center before June 30, and extending the life of the center at least 90 days beyond that date will be urged.

- He will bring the entire Job Corps question to the attention of the board of control on April 24.

- The board also will hold a breakfast meeting with members of the Student Senate on April 24, at which time the Job Corps matter can be raised by the Corps' two representatives on the senate or by other student senators.

- He will send a telegram to President Nixon giving his views on the Job Corps program — but the telegram will express his views as an individual and not as president of NMU.

Last night's public meeting on the Job Corps in Guild Hall reportedly was attended by 29 persons, six of them NMU students and the remainder town-folk. The meeting was called by the FOBSA and conducted by Franco.