A crowd of sixty patiently awaited the arrival of Herbert Fil-brick at the Carey Hall lounge last Thursday night. Excitement built within as the thought of seeing the double agent and author of the one time best seller, I Led Three Lives, played with their minds.

The disappointment that followed when a young man walked into the room with a portable tape recorder is not easily described. This forced the audience to realize that they had been duped by misleading advertising.

A mood of absolute boredom prevailed throughout the entire one hour plus taped lecture. The audience stared about the room trying to keep their minds occupied. Heads bobbed up and down as the grasp of sleep weighted the eyelids of some.

It soon became a situation of survival; any method of keeping awake was acceptable, and eventually some of the students gave up their valiant fights and surrendered to a silent slumber.

There could be little doubt in the minds of those witnessing this memorable experience that in the future they would be more careful analyzing posters and advertisements preying on their thirst for knowledge.
