Selection Of Jury Starts In Black Students' Trial

Selection of a six-member jury for the trial of six Northern Michigan University black students charged with creating a disturbance at the December sit-in at NMU started shortly before noon today in Marquette District Court with Judge George E. Hill presiding.

Prosecuting Attorney Edward A. Quinnell, who is representing the people in the case, and J. Kent Bourland, Hancock, attorney for the six defendants, began challenging the first eight jurors impaneled at 11 o'clock. Selection of the six-member jury is not expected to be completed until at least midway in the afternoon session.

Sixty prospective jurors who were instructed to report were seated in the courtroom when Judge Hill officially opened the trial at 10:30. Six will be selected along with one alternate in the event of illness to one of the jurors.

Prosecutor Quinnell, when questioning the first eight impaneled at the outset this morning, indicated that the trial may last at least one week.

In addition to the 60 jurors, there were about 50 spectators filling the remaining seats in the courtroom, most of them were NMU students. There also was a long line of about 75 more persons, mostly students, in the courthouse hallway waiting for seats to be vacated in the courtroom.

Facing the joint trial for creating a disturbance are Vernon Smalls, Marquette; David Williams, Detroit; Patrick Williams, Saginaw; Christopher Poole, Clarkston; Phillip Harper, Inkster, and Loren Lobban, New Rochelle, N.Y.

All six are charged with creating a disturbance at the Dec. 17-18 sit-in in the office of Dr. Allan L. Niemi, vice president of student affairs at NMU. The sit-in lasted for 19 hours during which Niemi was allegedly held by black students for 35 minutes. During the sit-in, the office was ransacked, windows were broken and office equipment damaged.

The six entered not guilty pleas and asked for a trial by jury when they were arraigned. Their attorney, Bourland, also filed a motion for separate trials for each of the six which was denied by Judge Hill. Previously, Judge Hill denied Bourland's motion for a dismissal of the charges.
