LANSING — Ten Northern Michigan University black students and NMI President John X. Jamrich spelled out their arguments to the Democratic governors of the state officials today.

They held separate press conferences in the capitol that morning and later planned direct approaches to the legislative leaders.

These were the developments at noon today.

— Jamrich was called to testify before the House Committee on Colleges and Universities this afternoon.

— The students picked up support from the legislature's black caucus, which helped to raise the stakes of the controversy and promised an investigation.

— Students said they would seek a meeting with Milliken to back up their demands and to get a promise of protection on campus.

— Jamrich said the black students have been treated unfairly but because of academic troubles at the university, the student body was to blame.

— Patrick Williams, Saginaw senior and president of the Black Students Association, said it was a good day for the black students.
